

Unless otherwise approved as a disability or pregnancy accommodation, or absent a successful appeal under the Administrative Withdrawal Policy, students who are absent for more than 20% of the class sessions will not earn academic credit for the course. An absence for any reason counts toward the maximum of the 20% absences permitted.

C. January Intersession and Summer Mini-Terms

Students enrolled in any January intersession or summer mini-terms that Southwestern offers must attend all class meetings to receive unit credit.

D. LAWS I

Attendance in LAWS I classes during Week One is part of the attendance policy. Week One is the first week of school for non-SCALE J.D. first-year students before they begin their full course load. In addition, missing more than two LAWS I classes during Week semester and that individual course professors will set the specific schedule for work to be completed.

G. Attendance in Asynchronous Online and Hybrid Courses

A student attends an online course (or the online portion of a hybrid course) by participating in a synchronous class or otherwise engaging in an academically related activity, per the course syllabus or program policy. Examples of asynchronous academically related activity include but are not limited to contributing to an online discussion or chat session; submitting an assignment or working draft; working through exercises; taking a quiz or exam; viewing or completing an interactive tutorial; participating in an online study group; and initiating contact with a faculty member to ask a related question.
